Luca from Italy tells us:

“I was in kindergarten and two of my friends, Filippo and Mattia, were playing together, building a house. At a certain point, Filippo took one piece off the house and attached it to another side, but Mattia didn't like it there.

He was upset and went to the teacher to tell her what Filippo had done. While the teacher was trying to get them to make up with each other, Filippo started to cry.

When I saw him crying, I went over to him. I asked him what happened, then listened to his story and tried to make him feel better. He stopped crying and a few minutes later, he made peace with Mattia. When they started playing together again, I felt a lot of joy in my heart.”
